It has been eight months since my world got turned upside down.

I have become what you would call a lonely soul. I can't stand to be around people. People are too happy for my liking. I tried to take my own life two months back but I just woke up in hospital. They say it gets better with time, that is a whole load of bull. I am home schooled now because I just didn't have the guts to go back to school. My typical day is like this I wake up roll up a joint (yes I can roll now), smoke, eat breakfast (I can't eat with out smoking), take a shower and wait for my tutor Mr Stanford to arrive. He is a retired Chemistry professor so he is really smart. I sure he doesn't come cheap. Today he is a bit light so I light up another joint. He will be giving me back my test scripts as we are done with the school term. You are probably wondering about my son Noah. Mtho's parents took him to stay with them because I just couldn't bare to have him around. I cant even remember the last time I saw him. Nozi gave up on trying to take me with them when they go to visit him. As far as I am concerned Once there was a brand-new book that arrived at the library.

The book loved to be read, and children like you would often check it out. But in time, the book became old and worn. It was no longer pulled excitedly off the shelf—until one day, a little girl found the lonely book, opened its shabby cover, and began to read. . . .

In this enchanting book about a book, Kate Bernheimer and Chris Sheban delicately depict the spell cast over each of us by the books we love most of all.
